Dear Convener,

I am writing to notify you that the Project Willow Grangemouth study has concluded and that a “Public Information Document” which sets out the study’s findings and recommendations has been published.

Project Willow has identified a set of nine low carbon projects that could be progressed if the private and public sectors work together, with the projects falling under three categories: “waste”, “bio-resources”, and “conduit for offshore wind”. The Public Information Document outlines indicative timescales for deploying these projects, as well as projected direct jobs impact and capital and operating expenditure of each project.

The findings and recommendations of Project Willow have been published in a “Public Information Document” on Scottish Development International’s website, which reflects the role that Scottish Enterprise will play in identifying and attracting investors with an interest in progressing the opportunities outlined in Project Willow. The Public Information Document can be accessed here: <https://www.sdi.co.uk/invest-in-scotland/invest-in-projects/project-willow-grangemouth>.

Yours sincerely,

GILLIAN MARTIN
